Authoritarian tendencies, through the accumulation of power in the hands of a small group of people, the fall in citizens' participation in public affairs, the narrowing of media freedom and the privatization of public resources are common neuralgic points of all the countries of the former Yugoslavia. The countries that are now called the region of Southeast Europe.

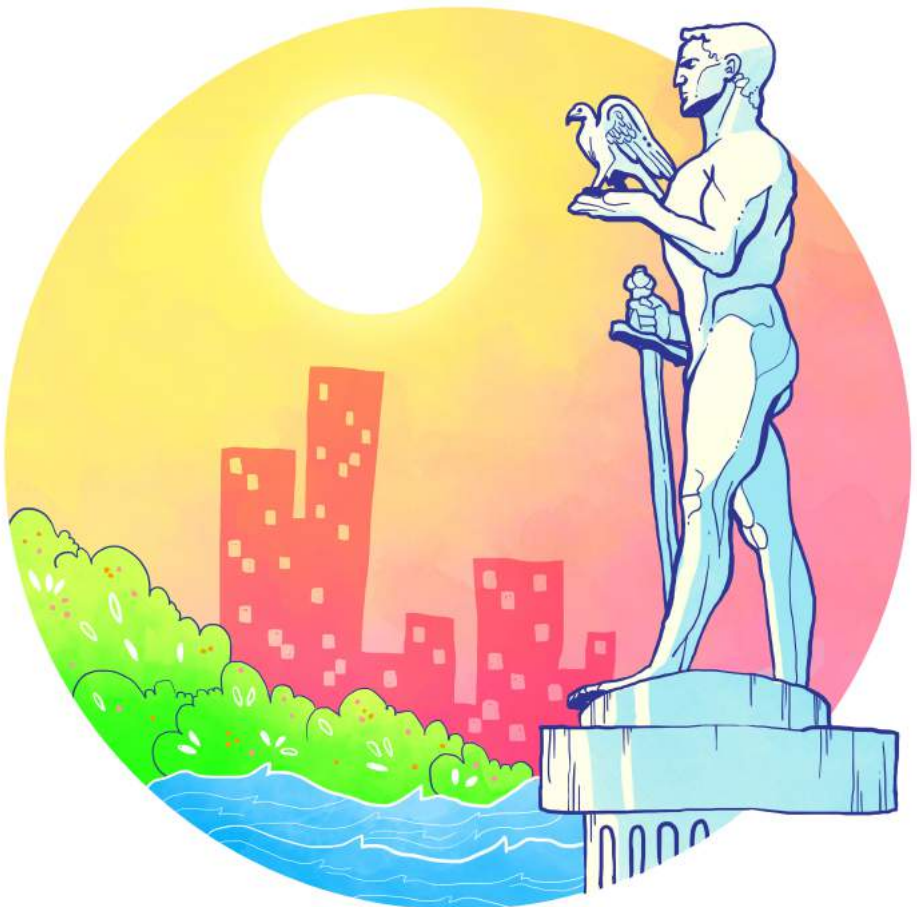

On this panel we want to find the answers to the following questions:

Is it possible to find a link between local movements and organizations that, each in its own community and independently of the other, work very similar, if not the same thing, trying to restore the captured cities and states to those to whom they belong – citizens? Are those the new political forces and newspapers of a different region? Participants are the representatives of political organizations and initiatives from Croatia, Bosnia, Montenegro, Slovenia, Albania, Kosovo, Serbia, and North Macedonia.

Ne davimo Beograd (Don't let Belgrade Drown) was formed in 2014 in protest at the huge urban projects that aimed to turn an area of the capital's historic city waterfront into luxurious commercial and residential buildings. By objecting in a variety of ways, from institutional engagement to civil disobedience, Ne davimo Beograd has kept the project under close public scrutiny.

Small-scale actions were followed by mass protests in 2015 and at the beginning of 2016. The watershed moment followed the demolitions of 25 April 2016, when citizens showed up in great numbers to protest, demanding resignations and laying criminal responsibility at the door of officials.

Today, Ne davimo Beograd is dealing with wider forms of action. In 2018 they took place in Belgrade city elections where they had 3,48% of votes, which was not enough for the threshold of 5% to enter city assembly. With 6 other organizations, Ne davimo Beograd formed collective Krov nad glavom, which fights delocations.

In march 2019 Citizens front was grounded. It consists of 9 local organizations from Serbia, Ne davimo Beograd being one of first to join. Citizens front is national association, and is turned to parliament fight, with focus on local and parliament elections in 2020.
